Give the world area focus of 'Africa', this section of Honors Inquiry II will be examining the notion and consequences of both Colonialism and Cosmopolitanism. The questions we'll be asking will be both specific to the historical colonization of Africa as well as focused on major themes throughout philosophy, such as political ethics, development of self, and epistemology. While perhaps many of us realize that colonialism was ‘bad’, we might not be fully aware of the intense ramifications that continue to ripple throughout all cultures today. Moreover, we might not be as cautious as we should be when considering Cosmopolitanism, maybe those qualities that it shares with colonialism are so quickly dismissed because of how charmed we are by the possibility of an ideal and shared world. This course will thus attempt to understand the full impact of colonization and consider the merits of its cousin, cosmopolitanism. Authors we will be reading: Franz Fanon, Albert Memmi, Kwame Appiah, V.Y. Mudimbe, and others.
