HIST 388: U.S. Since 1945
Over the second half of the twentieth century and early years of the twenty-first centuries, the United States underwent dramatic political, cultural, and economic shifts. Musical tastes shifted from Frank Sinatra to Dr. Dre, television shows morphed from Leave it to Beaver to The Jerry Springer Show. Prisons became populated with non-violent drug offenders as part of the War on Drugs. Overseas, the US became deeply committed to intervention in Asia, Latin America, and the Middle East in a global war on communism, and later a global war on terror. Back at home, politics reflected the rise of new groups on the left and the right as each fought for their beliefs and sought to use the expanding federal state to meet their needs and goals. This course will explore all of these major changes and more as we seek to understand how the modern United States has evolved and how it may change in the future.

HIST 396: Intro to Public History
This course is about preserving, interpreting, and presenting history outside of the classroom. Students learn why and how people look at history the way that they do. Is public history supposed to be a matter of celebration, commemoration, or something else? While examining such issues, students will also survey various specializations across the field of Public History, including current museum, archival, archaeological, and historical preservation theories and practices. Students will also assist a community partner in a history project.

HIST 447W: History of Human Rights 19th Century to Present
World War I spurred a new era of humanitarianism, which ultimately led to the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights on December 10, 1948. This course will cover the history of Human Rights as it developed from early 19th Century notions of charity to that of today’s inalienable rights. The assigned readings will explore how the consequences of war, famine, disease and historical legacies of slavery and colonialism pushed humanitarians to consider others who lived within and outside of their respective nation states. Contemporary Human Rights efforts will be examined from a historical perspective, taking into consideration various legal, political, religious and philosophical applications.
