Bonnie LeRoy, MS, CGC, is a board certified genetic counselor with over 25 years of experience in the clinical setting and 30 years serving in leadership positions in the profession. Professor LeRoy has been the director of the genetic counseling graduate program at the University of Minnesota since 1989 and a collaborator with the Center for Bioethics. Genetic counseling is a relatively new health care profession and much of Professor LeRoy's interest has focused on the developing practice. She has been engaged in studies that better define a model of practice from which outcomes can be determined and measured. In addition, Professor LeRoy is interested in the clinical training of genetic counseling professionals. In collaboration with students in training, she has been involved with studies investigating a wide variety of issues that have an impact on training, and in turn, service provision. As part of her teaching, Professor LeRoy has had her genome sequenced and she will share that experience and the experiences of patients and families.
