Basic Philosophical Questions

May 14 - 31
9:30 am - 12:30 pm

Dr. Daniel Selcer

This course is a discussion- and activity-based introduction to thinking from a philosophical perspective. I intend to create a relaxed and active learning environment that emphasizes discussion and collective engagement with the problems we will treat: the differences between belief, fact, and reason as distinct ways of making claims about the world; the nature of art and its relationship to the public space we all inhabit; and ways of thinking about relationships among beauty, truth, and love. Though we'll sometimes explore short texts together during class sessions and students will be asked to read and prepare small amounts of material on weekends, no out-of-class reading or writing will be assigned during the week.

Would you like to....

• Satisfy a central University Core Curriculum requirement in just 11 sessions over 3 weeks?
• Explore philosophy with a tenured recipient of teaching awards and national pedagogy grants?
• Receive a 25% tuition discount?
• Live on campus for free? (optional!)
• Finish before June?

Then register for summer UCOR 132-01!

Details on free housing and 25% tuition discount:
http://www.duq.edu/academics/degrees-and-programs/summer-programs

Collage by Richard Russell